EDITOR'S NOTE:

Hey Mammoths,

It's competition season for plenty of people, including me. It's been stressful but incredibly rewarding. Though it doesn't help that we've had unexpected school closures. It's been a wild couple of months, but it seems as if everything has calmed down at this point. The Mammoth Tribune staff hopes that you can take your mind off everything for just a little while and relax as you read this issue. From Miku and Godzilla, to incarcerated firefighters, and video game addiction, The Mammoth Tribune staff has worked hard and diligently to bring you quality entertainment and news.

Best wishes and happy Valentine's Day,

Gabriela Ordaz, Co-Editor in Chief of The Mammoth Tribune

Around Campus

By Lily Hawkinson

On Jan. 23, 28, and 30 our UNICEF and Jewelry, and Crochet club partnered together to do a Valentine's Gram Fundraiser to help support UNICEF. This fundraiser included various sizes of crochet flowers, and jewelry sets that students could purchase to be distributed right before Valentine's Day.

Another active organization on campus has been the Theater Costuming class. The class has been working diligently to prepare for their production of Hamlet later this semester. On Jan. 16, costuming members took a field trip to Joann Fabrics and Goodwill to find materials and inspiration to bring their costume ideas to life. One of the theater costuming members, Shiloh Wainaina (2027), commented that Hamlet will be an "alternative production without a specific time period." She added that finding materials that are "more European than Americanized, Medieval over Modern" and deciding what fabrics "fit each character best" was a memorable experience for her.

With the surge in winds after the student's return on Jan. 7, we have had a few days where school was cancelled. The Journalism staff wanted to highlight how WCA students spent their time on these random days off from school.

"I spent an entire day with my best friend Katie. We yapped, shopped, ate at In N Out, and watched 10 Things I Hate About You. Also we got matching pjs which are just so cute and fun. Anyway I love her and I am forever grateful for our friendship." - Tagan Brown (2025)

"I like to take my telescope out and look at the night sky while there is little light pollution." - Alex Strecker (2027)

"Hang out with my cute adorable awesome handsome cat named Jeremy." - Abigail McClymont (2025)

"Draw!" - Ella Vervienne Mahutga (2028)

"When it wasn't too windy I was practicing volleyball, but when the wind became too much, I got to enjoy a lot of music and when I had power, TV!" - Nathan Manriquez Palos (2026)

"Practice for mock trial! (grind never stops)" - Cody Moore (2025)

Valentine's Day Treat

By Zeydi Ponce

Red velvet was first created by accident in the 17th century while baking a cocoa cake, but it quickly became a staple in the baking world. Since then, red velvet has become the “unofficial confection of Valentine's Day.” With Valentine's Day just around the corner, giving your loved ones a sweet treat is a thoughtful thing to do, especially when it is handmade. Follow this recipe to make some delicious red velvet cookies.

Ingredients:

1 ½ cups all-purpose flour
½ cup unsweetened cocoa powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup butter, softened
¾ cup white sugar
1 egg
2 tablespoons milk
1 ½ teaspoons vanilla extract
1 tablespoon red food coloring
½ tablespoons shortening oil
Pink ChocoMaker Cake Drip
Sprinkles

Instructions:

1. Strain flour, cocoa powder, baking soda, baking powder, and salt into a bowl and whisk together.
2. In another bowl, beat butter with an electric mixer until fluffy, about two minutes; beat in white sugar until smooth, about one minute. Beat egg, milk, and vanilla extract into butter mixture; beat in food coloring until uniformly colored.
3. Slowly add the flour mixture to the butter mixture and mix on low until they are combined.
4. Put plastic wrap over the bowl and refrigerate for one hour or overnight.
5. Preheat oven to 350 degrees, and spread butter on a baking pan.
6. Roll out the dough, cut out heart shapes, and place them on the pan spread out from each other.
7. Place the cookie pan in the oven and bake for seven minutes.
8. Take the cookies out of the oven and heat cake drip in the microwave for 30 seconds.
9. Spread drip on the cookies and place sprinkles on top, then let cool.
10. Enjoy!

WCA's Favorite Rom Coms

By Gabriela Ordaz

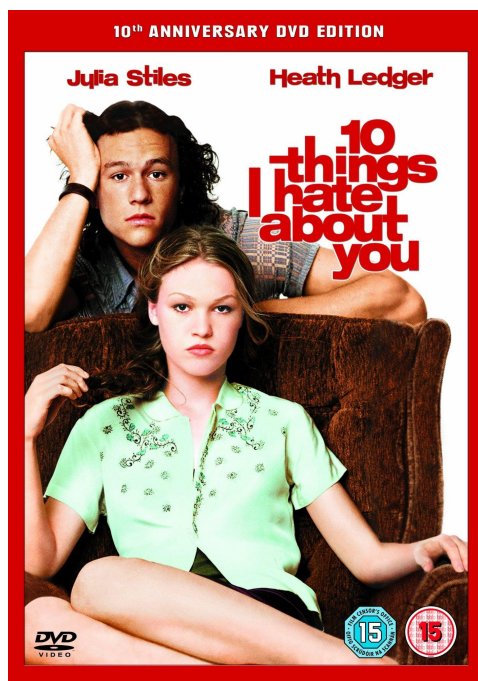

As Valentine's Day is coming just around the corner, it's time to cozy up and watch your favorite romantic comedies! Not sure what to watch? The Mammoth Tribune staff asked students what their favorite movies are.

(500) Days of Summer

"I really like this movie because it showed how deeply flawed love is and the complexities that come along with it. It is also a really entertaining movie." -David Sagastume (2027)

"I really don't like the movie, summer sucks I can't wait for fall..." - Matthew Gadsby (2025)

10 Things I Hate About You

"Overall funny movie, almost every joke hits and the relationships between all the characters are genuinely interesting." - Alexander Boring (2027)

"Heath Ledger." - Alyssa Archiga (2027)

La La Land

"I think this movie does almost everything right. Great acting, music, cinematography, and plot. It's an overall beautiful love story with a morbidly realistic ending" - Alejandro Peña (2025)

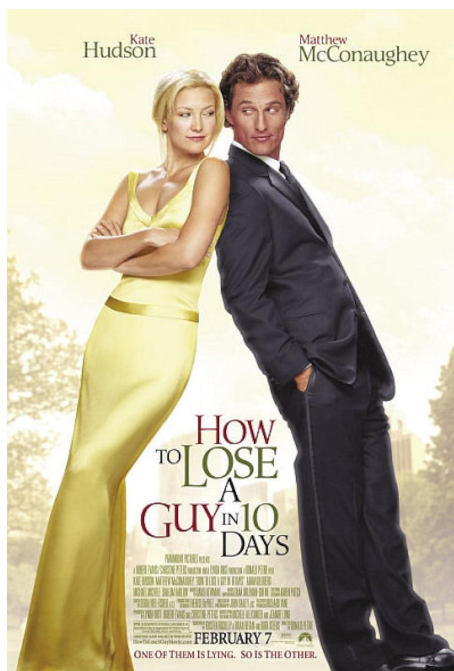

"I enjoy the color palette and the music." - Cody Moore (2025)

How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days

“I like the music and thought the dynamic was cute.” – Kimberly Flores (2026)

“I love Matthew McConaughey so much.” – Abigail McClymont (2025)

“I like this movie because it is very funny at the same time as showing a story about 2 people that fell in love under the craziest of circumstances. This movie is also something you can watch many times and not get bored.” – Alina Ahumada (2028)

To All the Boys I've Loved Before

“It is a super cute RomCom about teens and it has a very interesting story line rather than being one-dimensional. It is a great comfort movie and a very well executed adaptation of a book into a movie. It has a great balance of comedy, romance, and drama making it a great modern RomCom movie.” – Emma Wright (2026)

The History of Valentine's Day

By Lovina Seelhofer

Valentine's Day is a well-known holiday, but its origins may surprise you. Today, it's a celebration of romantic relationships, friendships, and admiration for others, but its history stretches back to the 3rd century.

The story begins with two men named Valentine, both executed on Feb. 14 under the orders of Roman Emperor Claudius. Country Living.com tells the legend that one of those doomed men, Saint Valentine of Terni, secretly performed marriage ceremonies for Roman soldiers forbidden to marry.

Initially, Feb. 14 was far from romantic. During ancient Roman festivals like Lupercalia, priests would run through the streets striking women with blood-soaked hides of sacrificed goats and dogs, believing it would bless women with fertility. By the late 5th century, Pope Gelasius sought to replace this pagan tradition with a Christian one. He established the Feast of St. Valentine, formally tying the date to the saint's legacy.

Over time, the religious observance transformed into a celebration of love. By the Middle Ages, people exchanged love letters, flowers, and tokens of affection. Today, Valentine's Day is celebrated not just by those in love but also by friends and family, making it a universal expression of love and appreciation.

Keeping up with the Herd:

Angelica Ayala

By Vivianne Ugarte

Angelica Ayala graduated from WCA in 2021 and participated in many clubs such as the Yearbook Committee, Journalism Club, Community Service Club, and Rock Band. Aside from her clubs, she also ran cross country and track for Tahquitz High School. After graduating from WCA, she followed her passion for the media industry and attended the University of California, Santa Barbara, where she majored in communications. Angelica graduated from UCSB in the summer of 2024. WCA's The Mammoth Tribune was able to catch up with Angelica who shared some advice and insight from her education and her future plans.

What are you doing now?

Since graduation, I've been actively seeking full-time opportunities in the film and media industry. Over the summer, I interned with a public relations agency and specialized in working with musical artists. This experience allowed me to dive deep into the world of media relations, social media management, and artist promotion. It was a rewarding journey, helping me realize the importance of networking and effective communication. Currently, I am focusing on building my portfolio, networking with industry professionals, and applying for roles that align with my passion for storytelling and media production.

What do you enjoy about your career?

What I love most about the film and media industry is its dynamic and multifaceted nature. Every project is unique, bringing new challenges and opportunities to learn and grow. Whether it's crafting narratives and engaging with audiences or coordinating productions, the industry offers endless opportunities. I am particularly drawn to the creative collaboration that drives this field. Moreover the broad scope of the industry allows me to explore various roles, from publicity and communication to production and beyond.

What are some of your plans for your future?

My future plans involve establishing a career in the film and media industry, particularly within the realms of publicity, communication, or production. I aim to utilize my skills and experiences to contribute to impactful projects that resonate with audiences. In the short term, I plan to continue honing my craft by taking on diverse roles and learning from industry veterans. In the long term, I want to take on leadership positions and ultimately, hope to make a positive difference in the world through the power of media.

How did WCA prepare you for college and the real world?

The curriculum at WCA provided me with a significant advantage as I entered university. Thanks to the rigorous academic program, I started my first year of university with a sophomore standing, allowing me to focus on classes related to my major early on since most of my general education credits were already completed. The challenging coursework and high expectations at WCA pushed me to excel and develop strong study habits, making the transition to college smoother. Additionally, the supportive and dedicated teachers at WCA equipped me with critical thinking and problem-solving skills necessary for success and higher education and beyond. The intense academic environment made college courses feel manageable, and I felt well prepared to attack with the demands of university life and the professional world.

What advice can you give to WCA students preparing for college and the real world?

The advice I'd offer to WCA students is to fully embrace and leverage your time as a student. This is a unique period in your life where you have the freedom to ask questions, make mistakes and learn from them, and get involved in what sparks your interest. Take advantage of the opportunity to build meaningful relationships with your professors by attending office hours. Even if it seems intimidating, their guidance and mentorship can be an invaluable experience when it comes to needing recommendation letters or career advice. Additionally, while academic and professional achievements are important, prioritizing your mental health is crucial. College can be isolating at times and doesn't come without its hardships. So, take time for self-care, set boundaries, and engage in activities that rejuvenate you. Embrace your college days and all the new experiences that come with it because, before you know it, you'll be reminiscing about them!

Student Spotlight: Purely Prayers Boutique

By Kaisara Arambula

Running a small business while balancing academic responsibilities is not easy, yet, Berlin Kruse (2026) has successfully done both. She is owner of Purely Prayers Boutique, a Christian-themed boutique, that shares the inspiration and dedication behind her unique venture.

At Purely Prayers Boutique, Berlin offers a wide range of handmade products, including wired rings, gem necklaces, clay necklaces, wooden items like crosses and planters, trinket bowls, makeup bags, magnets, and bookmarks. Each product is carefully crafted, with customization options available to meet individual customer preferences. For example, the clay necklaces can feature a cross, an initial, or even a bow, while the trinket bowls are designed to hold anything from rings to skincare.

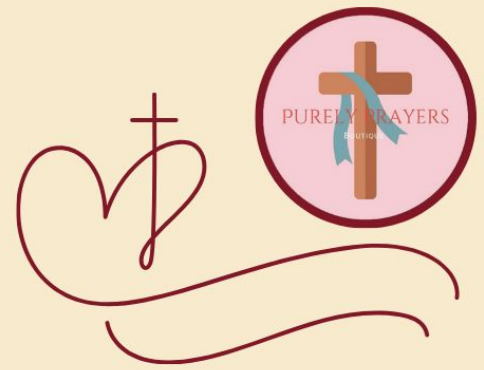

The name “Purely Prayers” was inspired by her desire to create a Christian-centered business that encourages a closer relationship with God. The boutique is not only about selling products but also about encouraging a sense of community and spiritual connection.

What inspired her to start this business? “I had seen smaller businesses selling similar items for high prices, and I wanted to provide affordable options,” she explains. The most rewarding part is ““seeing customers’ faces light up from a product they love”, she adds. While earning money is important, it’s the joy of creating and sharing her work that motivates her!

Despite the challenges of working in a small space and coming up with designs that resonate with others as she says. She remains passionate about her products and driven by her faith. Balancing school, sports, and her business, she finds time to work on her creations during free moments, keeping the process fun and manageable. Her father and grandmother are both experienced in selling at craft fairs and have been mentors in her journey. They’ve provided guidance, helping her navigate obstacles and refine her skills.

Looking ahead, she hopes to see her business grow and reach more people. With prices ranging from $2 for bookmarks to $20 for planters, Purely Prayers Boutique offers affordable handmade products. You can follow her journey on Instagram @purelyprayers.boutique, with plans to expand on Etsy.

The Hunger Games is a YA dystopian series, and its first novel, titled The Hunger Games, was originally published in September of 2008. In the novel, we follow Katniss Everdeen, a 16-year-old living in what used to be North America, now called Panem. Panem is divided into the Capitol and then twelve districts which contribute to Panem in different ways. Katniss lives in district 12, the coal mining district, known as the “backwater” district. We follow her to the reaping of the annual Hunger Games, where twenty-four kids, two from each district, are pitted against each other to the death. The reaping is where one boy and one girl, between the ages of 12 and 18, get chosen to participate in these Games.

That’s where we are introduced to Haymitch Abernathy, District 12’s only surviving victor of their measly two victors. He is known throughout district 12 and Panem as a drunkard, one of the many reasons being picked during the reaping in district 12 is seen as a simple death sentence. Victors are meant to “mentor” and help their tributes, and as district 12 has only had two victors throughout the entirety of the Games, there is only the drunkard Haymitch and district 12’s escort, Effie Trinket. It’s often wondered just how Haymitch won his games, especially since he participated in a Quarter Quell, a special year for the Hunger Games that happens every 25 years. Because of this specialty, these Quarter Quell Games always have a twist. Haymitch’s games had double the tributes, so he was pitted against 47 other kids rather than the usual 23.

This is what the new Hunger Games novel, Sunrise on the Reaping, will be diving into, shedding light on what went down during Haymitch’s games, how he won, and most likely just how he fell into addiction. According to a press release in Cosmopolitan, Suzanne Collins, the author of the series, noted that the novel will not only dive deeper into Haymitch’s story, but also in the power of those who hold the narrative have, their propaganda and the “ease [of which] the many are governed by the few.” The book is set to be released on March 18 of this year, it is already available for pre-order, and a movie is set to come out on Nov. 20, 2026.

A New Sunrise

By Adriana Ordaz

Many fans are incredibly excited for this new addition to the beloved series, eager to see why Haymitch turned out as we see him with Katniss and what exactly went down during those Games. Though, it might be best to keep an open mind. According to Screenrant, the possibility of two point of views, which is unheard of for the series, is huge, especially since neither the scholastic announcement nor any official coverage from Collins mentioned Haymitch by name, which is strange because during the announcement for The Ballad of Songbirds and Snakes, it was made very clear that we would be following a young Coriolanus. Though Haymitch’s story has been eagerly anticipated, and it is sure to be another hit, it’s good to not have any set expectations on what the book will focus on. After all, we already know how the Games work, as well as how a Quarter Quell works, so what new things will Collins bring to the table for her world of Panem?

Could You Win?

By Maddox McAvaney

When it comes to human nature, being competitive is natural. But in Beast Games, it takes more than just a competitive nature to keep winning.

Beast Games is a competitive TV series hosted by Mr. Beast, a popular philanthropist and YouTuber. The show pits 1,000 contestants against each other in a series of grueling challenges for a chance to win $5,000,000—the largest cash prize in entertainment history. The series will have a total of 10 episodes, but it is currently still in production. The show promises to test its participants' mental, physical, and social limits. The life-changing prize raises the stakes, revealing contestants' true natures as the competition heats up.

Some of the challenges range from stacking blocks into a tower to physically demanding feats like pulling monster trucks and evading Navy SEALs. Each round introduces a new trial, pushing competitors closer to their breaking points.

Image Credit: AS USA

Image Credit: USA Today

Image Credit: IMDB

The emotional depth of Beast Games makes it easy for viewers to become invested in the contestants' journeys. Some people seek to win “gold chains and jet skis,” while others are there to retire their parents or to climb out of poverty. Sometimes the show is incredibly heartwarming, and other times you see people manipulate others in order to claw their way to the top. Multiple friends are lost along the way as the competition gets thinner, and it really becomes a mind game where many tears are shed.

In the end, the toughest challenge isn't just surviving the obstacles—it's enduring the emotional rollercoaster of the Beast Games.

BEAST

Red Light...

By Lucas Land

Netflix's most popular show, Squid Game, is back in action with its second season, directed once again by Hwang Dong-Hyuk. The survivor-thriller shows a different tone compared to the first season. The entire season was released on Dec. 26, 2024, and the actors that played surviving characters have reprised their roles, alongside a new cast of contestants.

Season two picks up immediately after the season one finale, and I enjoyed the deeper exploration of its protagonist, Seong Gi-hun. Gi-hun changes from a goofy, lovable guy, to someone extremely serious and overly cautious after winning in season one. His change is evident in an early scene where he watches the Recruiter playing ddakji with another down-on-his-luck man, evoking memories of his own past. Seeing Gi-hun immediately panic the second his plan to to end the games derailed was also good, as he instantly went back to being all alone. I enjoyed the decision to let players vote at the end of each game on if they want to end the games there and split the money between the remaining participants, or to continue. It explored that sense of gambler's mentality and the contestants' desperations, especially when they all started chanting "One more game, no more no less!"

Image Credit: About Netflix

The Recruiter, played by actor Gong Yoo, delivered a phenomenal performance this season and exploring his backstory allowed the audience to gain a deeper understanding of the nature of the games. While there weren't as many high stakes games this time around, the narrative didn't really call for as many games, since the main point of season two was to show Gi-hun's attempts at stopping the games instead of participating in them. Even though not as many games were shown off, the ones that were included—ddakji, gong-gi, spinning top, jegi, biseokchigi, and the classic red light, green light—were still entertaining to watch.

The only downside I can note is that the season ends with a cliffhanger. Thankfully, season three should be airing later this year, so the wait hopefully won't be that long.

Overall, Squid Game season two was a good season. While I still prefer season one for its more wrapped up plot, season two is still a very good season, and I will definitely be waiting for season 3.

SQUID

Beam Through the Competition with Miku and Godzilla

By Alejandro (AJ) Pena

After weeks of waiting, two highly anticipated Japanese icons have finally been added to Fortnite. When Chapter 2: Remix ended in December, we were transported to the Chapter 6 map, which is heavily inspired by Japanese mythology and culture. There are oni masks with different abilities, sprite creatures that can give out different player buffs, and a powerful typhoon blade that can slice through enemies with minimum effort. Along with that, there are many demon bosses and grunts throughout the map that can drop stronger versions of various items upon their elimination.

Though the new chapter and what it offered was already extremely packed and full of fun features, there was still excitement for more to come in January. With the release of the initial battle pass, players noticed that Legendary Godzilla would be the Chapter 6: Season 1 “secret skin” in roughly a month. Godzilla was officially able to be worn on Jan. 17 by gaining XP levels, and along with him, Kong and Mechagodzilla were available for purchase in the item shop.

But Godzilla did not just come as a cosmetic; he is also a boss that players can become for a limited time. Upon his initial release, he had a 20% chance to spawn in your game, but with a more recent update, he now has a 100% chance of spawning in your game. After the first storm circle closes, players in the match will be alerted of a Godzilla portal opening, and the first person to go into it will become a colossal Godzilla boss with tons of health. While in his boss form, you can stomp, use his laser beam, and roar to reveal nearby players.

However, Godzilla wasn't the only character players were excited for. After numerous leaks and speculation, players were certain that Hatsune Miku would be the next Fortnite Festival icon after Snoop Dogg. Sure enough, on Jan. 14, Miku came to the game with three skin variants, emotes, jam tracks, and tons of other great cosmetics. Her addition to the game sparked an uproar from fans, causing people who were not even active players of Fortnite to log on just to get Miku. Epic Games really went above and beyond when it came to implementing these two legends into the game.

No, It's Not a Stardew Valley Copy

By Gabriela Ordaz

Released on Aug. 5, 2024, Fields of Mistria is described as a RPG farming simulator with a medieval aesthetic. At its initial launch, the game was bombarded with criticism that it was a copy of “Stardew Valley,” one of the most recognizable and famous farming simulators among gamers and anyone who has even casually picked up video gaming.

When the game opens, the player is greeted by a discussion between two characters, brother and sister Eiland and Adeline, who are fretting over how they could possibly rebuild Mistria’s town reputation after a devastating earthquake left the town and its people in shambles. Both of them agree that what the town needs is to attract new people. Adeline remembers that there’s a farm just south of the town that’s been laying empty for years and both Adeline and Eiland decided that the best option would be to post a notice to the Adventurer’s Guild offering the farmland in exchange for assisting the townspeople, a notice that you, the player, answers.

Like Stardew Valley, Fields of Mistria is, at its core, a farming simulator. Many players have likened the beginning cutscene of the game to Stardew Valley’s beginning cutscene, where the player’s grandfather hands the player the deed to a farm on his deathbed. Player’s also draw connections between the games by the way that the player character interacts with the town’s residents, how the residents’ are presented, and the presence of a mine for players to explore, but that is just about where the similarities end.

While the game is still in its Beta testing phase and, as such, is missing some key storylines and gameplay, the Fields of Mistria development team, NPC Studio, posted a “roadmap” for the game on Jan. 17, promising players to deliver another massive update in March of this year. Even in its early infancy, Fields of Mistria has several aspects that make it an incredibly enjoyable game. Fields of Mistria has a constant and present storyline to follow that remains constant and relevant to the gameplay and how the player interacts with the game’s world. Perhaps the first thing a player notices when entering the game is the greater amount of customization abilities. Fields of Mistria prompts the player to create their character at the start of the game and allows the player to change their appearance at any point in the game and offers plenty more clothing options for the player to unlock. The writing for the characters are in-depth and three dimensional, allowing for an immersive experience that will have you playing the game for hours at a time.

Video Game Addiction: Exaggeration or Danger?

By Kolton Klug

When you think of addiction, what first comes to mind? Maybe you thought of drug use, smoking, alcohol abuse, or maybe even gambling. These are common examples of abuse, but all of these together pale in comparison to one of the most widespread and addictive habits of all: an addiction to technology—specifically, video games. The rate of this addiction skyrocketed during quarantine, with roughly 40% of the world population actively playing video games. Of those, approximately 4%—around 60 million people—are classified as addicted according to MPower Wellness. So, how did this addiction become so common? Why is it not discussed more often? And most importantly, how dangerous is it to those who are affected?

People play video games for many different reasons, either out of boredom or more commonly as an escape from reality. This alone is fine, and is generally healthy in short doses, but like most escapism, too much of a good thing can be a bad thing. A video game addiction would most likely be the same common symptoms of any other dependencies, the need to continue using in an attempt to get the same feelings. When access to gaming is restricted, individuals suffer withdrawal symptoms, with the most severe being depression. To many, the lure of escaping the outside world to one that we can fully control is hard to resist, but it can lead to significant issues over time.

The impact of video game addiction varies heavily, but there are a few clear signs to watch for. The first and hardest to notice is a lack of restraint. This means struggling to step away from gaming and feeling compelled to continue for various reasons. Sounds familiar to other addictions, but is it really that big of an issue? Afterall, it's not as directly harmful as something like substance addiction.

While it's true that a video game addiction—whether mild or severe—might not always be harmful, many of its symptoms often stem from and boost underlying issues, with gaming serving as a catalyst for overall laziness. The most immediate physical consequences are usually wrist strain from repetitive movements or, in extreme cases, health risks like blood clots from prolonged inactivity.

Despite this, playing video games offers several benefits. As previously mentioned, it can be a great stress reliever helping people to relax after a long day at school or work. It also can connect people that otherwise would have struggled with social interactions, giving them a platform where they can connect with similar people. Video games are also known to boost mental stimulation by fostering skills like critical thinking, creativity, and problem-solving, depending on the genre and challenges they present.

Remember, it's important to understand the risks of getting too heavily involved in gaming. While there are better alternatives for developing these skills, few are as accessible as video games. Regardless, many people—including myself and others I know—unfortunately game at such intense levels. I tried to reach out to many of these people, but it seems to be a sensitive subject to a lot of them.

Unsurprisingly, not many people want to talk about something that they acknowledge as a problem, but I'll talk about my experiences with video games. I will typically game for about two to three hours a day on weekdays, and play games that require a high skill ceiling. Personally, I believe that these games do have a lot of positives to them, including being able to pick and choose a game for your mood, whether to relax or to get into a competitive attitude, and connecting with others.

However, I know it is a problem whenever I reach upwards of eight hours of gaming a day on weekends. Gaming is a great way to connect with people who I normally would not be able to talk to as frequently, but there needs to be a balance of how long you are willing to play versus other activities. Ultimately, it is up to you to choose to stop playing when you surpass that balance of too much.

Why Can't We Commit?

By Samira Seelhofer

The beginning of every new year is consumed by promises individuals make to themselves that the majority of the time go left unfulfilled. The stereotypical, "I'll start eating healthier," "stop procrastinating," and "be more productive" are all promises we've heard people make to themselves or we have even made, the reality is they are often forgotten about, put off, or even just given up on. In TaTiana Cash's article, titled "Many abandon New Year's resolutions in January," dropping New Year's resolutions has become such a common occurrence that the second Friday in January is now referred to as "Quitter's Day." Research done by Baylor College of Medicine shows that nearly 88 percent of resolutions fail before the month of January is even over with.

Southern New Hampshire University made it their mission to get to the bottom of why society as a whole can't seem to follow through with their ever so enthusiastic resolutions. The tradition is said to have begun with Ancient Babylonians who had promised to repay all their debts come the new year. As individuals follow the traditions today they continue to set personal goals for them to accomplish in the new year, the only difference being they more often than not go unaccomplished and unresolved, just waiting to be set yet again the next year.

Comfort Zone Shake-Up

Dr. Thomas MacCarthy believes that change is the reason so few resolutions are being seen all the way through. "Change is hard" is something most people have probably heard in abundance throughout their lifetime, but being repeated a million times doesn't make it any less true.

Making huge changes in day-to-day life is a challenge, which is exactly the type of new year's resolutions that people set, lifestyle changes have an immense amount of work behind the surface. Failing to realize how much work goes into resolutions is ultimately what leads to their demise. According to Dr. Barb Lesniak, an executive director of social sciences at Southern New Hampshire University, "many people don't think beyond the early stages of their resolutions." Of course, buying fruits and vegetables to promote healthier habits is a great first step, but it can't be the only step. Another major problem is the lack of commitment, going off course can be extremely offsetting to many people, but the mistake or "cheat-day" shouldn't be the main focus, but rather everything after, the decisions after will decide if yet another New Year's Resolution gets put off to the next year. So when making resolutions keep in mind that's only the first step in an extremely long process.

Trophies of Gold

By McKayla (Sarinya) Binette

The Golden Globes, Oscars, and Grammys—Hollywood’s biggest nights in the film and music industries all coming to a head in the first quarter of 2025, with some incredible talent praised and some performances overlooked. The Golden Globes have just celebrated their 82nd award show, and the Oscars will be holding their 97th ceremony. Meanwhile, the Grammys will be celebrating their 67th year in the music industry.

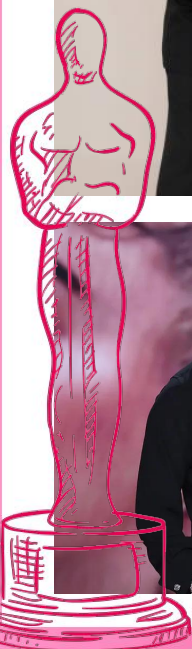

The first award show of 2025 was the Golden Globes hosted by comedian Nikki Glaser on Jan. 5. As a less well-known award ceremony, many people find this event less entertaining than the Grammys or Oscars; however, this year's Golden Globes was most entertaining because of its selection of winners. Demi Moore, for The Substance, and Sebastian Stan, for A Different Man, are among the accomplished actors who are finally getting their accolades after years of acting, each taking home a golden trophy for best actress and best actor. This year's Golden Globes was also hit with some criticism for its choices with the Netflix-streaming musical, Emilia Pérez. With a 76% Rotten Tomato score, it seemed as if critics enjoyed this piece but with a 34% audience rating, also from Rotten Tomatoes, people were upset that this movie won over more well-known films like Challengers and Wicked.

The Grammys might be the most well-known award show this season and will celebrate recordings and albums released from Sept. 16, 2023 through Aug. 30 2024 along with their respective artists. Nominations were released by the Grammy Awards official website on Nov. 8; categories such as “Best Pop Solo Performance” and “Best Pop Vocal Album” are forecasted to give artists a run for their money. With nominations including Billie Eilish, Sabrina Carpenter, Chappell Roan, and Beyoncé, it’s hard to predict who will take home a golden gramophone. In previous years, there have been artists who have won multiple categories in one night and posed for photos while cradling their numerous trophies.

Due to the Los Angeles fires that raged in early January, the Oscars’ voting window was extended from Jan. 12 to Jan. 17, delaying the nomination announcement from Jan. 17 to the morning of Jan. 23. The films with the most nominations were Emilia Pérez with 13 nominations and The Brutalist and Wicked with ten nominations each. Many have expressed their opinions about this year’s snubs, including Jon M. Chu for Wicked in the Best Director category and Nosferatu, a remake of the classic vampire movie, in any of the major categories. Many of the same films are grouped together for the same categories, so it’ll be enticing to see which nominees end up taking home that golden statue. The Oscars is a large part of Los Angeles’ history and it hopes to bring back life into Los Angeles and Hollywood after a tumultuous start to the year.

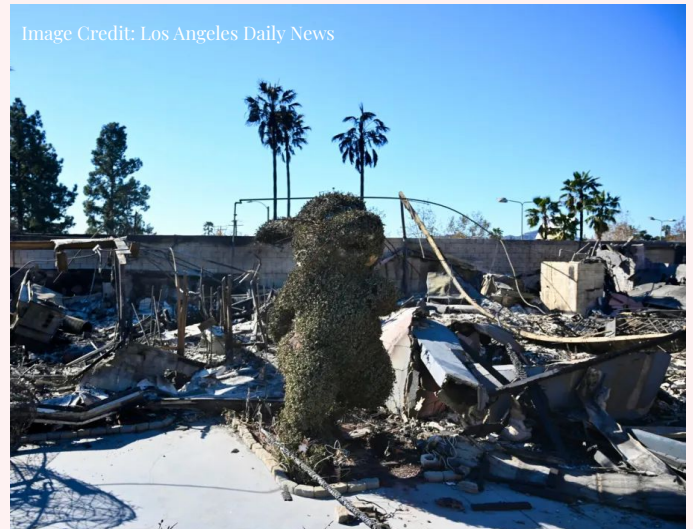

The Bunny Museum Tragedy

By Melody Cortez

The bunny museum, known for its plethora of bunny or bunny-themed items, burned down on Jan. 8, becoming another victim of the Eaton fire. The museum first opened in 1993, housing around 8,000 bunny items. The owners, Steve Lubanski and Candace Frazee, have since collected thousands more.

The Eaton fire has burnt more than 14,000 acres of land, with the bunny museum now being another casualty from the fire. According to Art Review, Steve and Candace were only able to save a few treasured pieces from their collection, which included their first two bunny items, some antiques, three Guinness World Record Certificates, and “the Elvis ‘Parsley’ Presley water pitcher.” They were also able to rescue their real bunnies and cats.

Before this devastating event, the museum was a beloved local attraction and was one of a kind. Many loved it for its weird and unique vibe that is rare to find. It had thousands of various items ranging from plushies and antique ceramics, to music and art. The owners used floor to ceiling style attractions, with the entire building covered in bunnies from top to bottom—an uncommon sight in today’s attractions. Steve and Candace have vowed to rebuild their life’s work, hopefully in the same location. They even started a GoFundMe campaign so that their supporters can contribute to the rebuilding process.

The story of Steve and Candace is a large part of the museum’s history. They started out giving each other bunnies for holidays or special occasions, but it eventually grew into a daily ritual. By the time of their wedding, their friends and family knew of their bunny passion, and they gifted them a surplus of bunnies. Soon after, Steve and Candace wanted to open to the public, so they started a museum in their home in Pasadena, California. They stayed there until the collection grew large enough to open a new place in Altadena, which is where the museum remained until the recent tragedy.

The first time the museum owners gained popularity was in 1999, when Steve and Candace won their first Guinness World Record for the largest bunny collection—a record they have continued to beat since then. When the fires took over the museum, there were approximately 60,000 items, as reported by the Pasadena Star-News.

The museum has started collecting donations from supporters all around the world who are looking forward to its restoration. People are sending in bunnies from their own collections so that the establishment can quickly recover from this heartache.

California's Incarcerated Firefighters

By Yaretzi Gutierrez

Firefighters over the last month have been busy fighting wildfires in the Los Angeles area. However, few people know about California's incarcerated firefighters who volunteer to help extinguish these fires. These incarcerated firefighters have played a critical role using hand tools to cut down fire lines and removing fuel near buildings to prevent fires from spreading. According to the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (CDCR), they have also been the ones that are in the frontlines as the fires were breaking out.

Incarcerated firefighters have been in use since 1915, when a program called the Conservation Camp Program was created by CDCR. This program gave healthy incarcerated individuals the opportunity to work on meaningful projects in the state, including helping during emergencies.

However, there has been some controversy towards the program, with many saying it is unfair to incarcerated workers. George Galvis, co-founder and executive director of Committees United for Restorative Youth Justice, told NBC News, "So you can say that it's a voluntary program, but there really isn't a lot of choice when you're not provided very many choices. It's exploitative." This isn't the only controversial factor. Prisoners are only paid by CalFire between $5 and $10 per day with $1 extra per hour during emergencies as reported by USA Today. Critics argue that their pay should be raised because they are risking their lives and are earning lower than minimum wage. Considering that they aren't professionally trained like other firefighters, incarcerated firefighters are more prone to getting severely injured. According to a 2018 TIME Magazine report, it was found that they are four times more likely to suffer from bruises, cuts, dislocations, and fractures, and eight times more likely to have health problems from inhaling smoke and particulates.

Image Credit: Jason Armond/Los Angeles Times

Even so, supporters of the program believe that they should continue using incarcerated firefighters because firefighting for prisoners is voluntary. The Marshall Project and the CDCR emphasize that individuals don't face any discipline if they choose not to serve time at the camp. The CDCR also doesn't allow just anyone to volunteer and states, "Volunteers must have minimum custody status, or the lowest-security classification based on their sustained good behavior in prison, ability to follow rules, and participation in rehabilitative programming." Additionally, incarcerated firefighters are able to gain time credits, often receiving two days off their sentence for every day they serve. For some, the program offers a sense of joy and purpose, and some even find it as a career path once they are released.

Whether you oppose or support the use of incarcerated firefighters, it's still important to recognize their contributions. They risk their lives to protect communities and should at least be recognized and appreciated for what they do for the state.

TikTok is Banned... Or Not?

By Em Sagastume and Gabriela Ordaz

After discussions about banning TikTok in the United States that began in 2020, the app was officially banned on Jan. 18. However, the ban lasted only about 16 hours. Despite its return, this does not mean that TikTok is here to stay. On Jan 20, President Donald Trump signed an executive order granting a 75-day extension to delay the ban, even though the law had already taken effect on Sunday, the day before.

For years now, U.S. officials have raised concerns that the Chinese government could use TikTok to manipulate content and gain access to user data. Many users opposed the reasoning behind the ban, feeling that it was driven more by political motives and racism than by genuine security concerns. The discussion surrounding the TikTok ban had dragged on for so long that many Americans didn't believe it would ever actually happen. But when it finally did, users split into two distinct groups. On one side, some accepted the ban and took it as an opportunity to break free from their scrolling addiction. On the other, there was grief and devastation. These disgruntled users scrambled to preserve their saves and drafts, but most couldn't due to limited storage space. Leaving behind everything they had accumulated over the years was a tough pill to swallow.

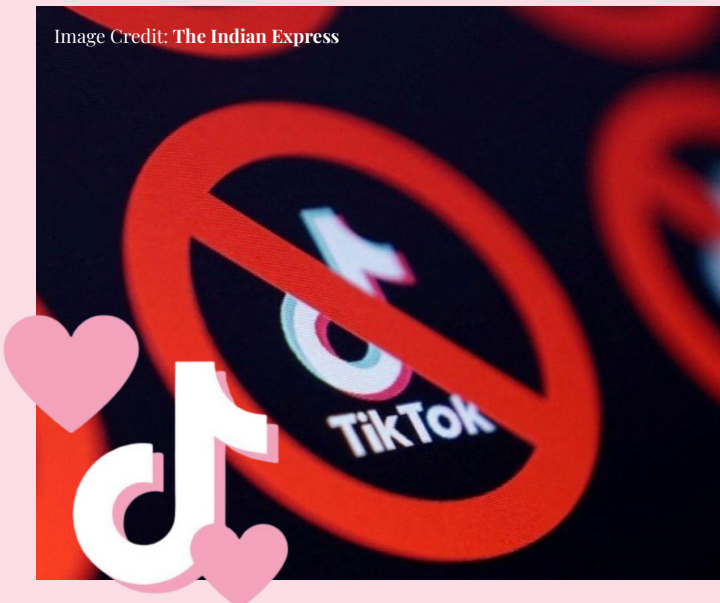

Image Credit: Wikipedia

Before the ban was enforced, many users discussed their plans for the post-ban future. Most had already come to terms with the situation, anticipating a shift to new platforms due to the lack of content. As a result, many expected to migrate to alternative apps. Three of the most popular "replacement" apps—X, Instagram, and Facebook—offer features similar to TikTok, particularly in terms of video content.

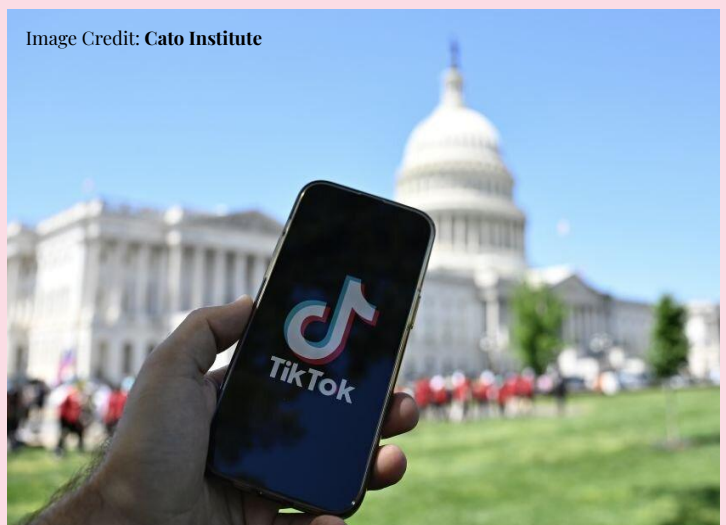

However, a significant number of users expressed interest in migrating to an app that wasn't as well-known in the United States: Xiaohongshu, also known in the U.S. as Red Note. Xiaohongshu is a popular Chinese social networking and e-commerce platform. It's often described as a blend of Pinterest and TikTok, offering a unique combination of visual content and shopping features. When this wave of Americans first joined Xiaohongshu, many Chinese users welcomed them and even joked about Americans being "TikTok refugees." However, this soon got old and American users started coming off as demanding and inconsiderate, so now Chinese users want them to get kicked off of the app.

The Supreme Court case that determined TikTok's fate is TikTok Inc. v. Merrick B. Garland, Attorney General, otherwise coined as TikTok v. Garland. In the case, the petitioners, the people arguing to keep TikTok unbanned, argued against the Protecting Americans from Foreign Adversary Controlled Applications Act, which would ban the app on American soil unless "U. S. operation of the platform is severed from Chinese control." The petitioners argued that the Act violated the First Amendment rights of the millions of Americans that use the app, but the Supreme Court decided that it did not need to review the case based on the potential content that would be banned. In the released Per Curiam slip opinion (which means that the written decision is subject to edits but will not change the overall decision), the Court decided that "[the act does] not target particular speech based upon its content or regulate speech based on its function or purpose."

This meant that the Supreme Court did not review the case from the view of a First Amendment violation at all. The Court's decision has drawn plenty of criticism from people claiming that it is hypocrisy. Those critics have pointed to Facebook's massive 2019 data breach that, according to Forbes, affected 533 million Facebook users, saying that, if the Court was concerned about the safety of American data, it should have banned Facebook and other related Meta platforms years ago.

Critics of the decision have also pointed out that several politicians who supported the Act pointed to content on the app as a reason the app should be banned. Representative Mike Gallagher and Senator Josh Hawley are just two of the politicians who have criticized TikTok for seemingly having more American supporters of Palestine than other platforms, and using that argument as a reason to support a ban on TikTok. Critics have said that, even if the language of the Act did not explicitly regulate content, it is obvious that the backers of the Act had the intent to regulate content.

Regardless, it seems that all the Supreme Court case had an effect on was the case law in the country. Sixteen hours after the ban was implemented, the app was restored to American users. Many people are still uncertain about what the future has spelled out for TikTok.

ICE Raids in America

By Vivianne Ugarte

On his first day of office, Trump had signed about 20 executive orders or actions, two of which caused many immigrants to worry. Many believe that Trump has directly attacked immigrants through his order that is attempting to get rid of birthright citizenship; however, that does not mean that those individuals are remaining silent on the issue.

California Attorney General Rob Bonta immediately took action and challenged this executive order in federal court asserting that it is a constitutional right and a direct attack on the 14th amendment. New York Attorney General, Letitia James, also shared her insights with AXIOS claiming that this is just an attempt to “sow division and fear” and is ready to fight back against Trump’s order.

However some were relieved to hear of this order due to a decades-old belief that there is a “white-replacement theory”—the idea that policies are designed to shift political power away from White Americans. NewsNation reported that Trump has backed this theory by claiming that immigrants are “poisoning the blood of our country.”

Alongside the birthright citizenship order, Trump also signed an executive order that allows ICE agents to enter schools and places of worship if deemed necessary to detain immigrants. The order also removed broad humanitarian parole programs which allowed certain migrants to stay in the US temporarily. The administration believes these actions will help enforce immigration laws more effectively and will put a stop to the ‘abuse’ of the humanitarian parole program after allowing 1.5 million migrants to enter the country according to NewsNation.

Since these orders, reports of ICE operations have been published all over social media leaving many immigrants worried about being detained. Many workplaces have seen a dramatic drop in attendance with as many as half of their workers refusing to show up. According to Yahoo, one Chicago business reported that only 10 out of 40 to 50 workers showed up following the orders. Some predominantly immigrant neighborhoods in the city now appear deserted as residents fear detention according to Yahoo! News.

Chicago is not the only city seeing a drop in worker participation. Express U.S. News reported that some farms in Bakersfield, California had roughly 75% of their workers refuse to attend work, raising fears about crop losses and potential threats to the U.S. food supply. California schools are also noting rising student absences and many teachers and staff members have been issued materials that will help them to prepare for a potential ICE raid, though ICE officials insist that they only target individuals involved in illegal activities such as drug or human trafficking.

However, some individuals dispute these claims according to CNN, pointing to reports of unmarked ICE vehicles conducting racially profiled raids. In one incident, a New Jersey resident and military veteran was detained, with agents questioning the legitimacy of his service documentation. New Jersey Mayor Steven Fulop condemned the raids, accusing ICE agents of unlawfully detaining law-abiding individuals without warrants and staking out well-known community areas.

Despite the backlash, there is still discussion over the need for border enforcement, asylum restrictions, and removal of immigrants for national security. The Mexican government has criticized Trump's actions, including attempts to deport immigrants via military flights, which were denied landing permission. As expected, this has frustrated the Trump administration. These tensions have strained the relationship between the U.S. and Mexico, raising concerns about the future of their alliance.
